The LibQUAL+® survey is one of the ways libraries nationwide measure service quality. Drake Library conducted LibQUAL+® in 2003, and again in April 2007. Thanks to the high level of participation from all our users, we now have a wealth of data available to evaluate our services. 400 personalized comments were received (up from 247 in 2003). Each of these helped confirm and clarify information not necessarily conveyed by the prepared survey questions.

Library staff set to work right away, discussing possible changes to library policies and activities. The suggestions in the left column are among those that we are working to implement.

In some cases, changes were made immediately. Beginning with the Fall 2007 semester the library is now open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, during the semester. Previously, extended hours did not start until mid-semester.

One obvious problem at the library was the poor condition of the roof. We are happy to report that new roof construction began in July 2007, and is progressing on schedule.

Much information has been collected, in terms of your perception of service quality at Drake. We are in the process of analyzing that data, as well as comparing it to our previous survey results. Please stay tuned for more changes at Drake, made in response to your ideas.

At Drake Library, user feedback is very important to us. Suggestions and comments are welcome any time, whether offered in person, via e-mail, using our comment cards (located near the Circulation Desk), or via the Web from our library homepage - http://www.brockport.edu/library/suggestion

The LibQUAL+® survey is one of the ways libraries nationwide measure service quality. Drake Library conducted LibQUAL+® in 2003, and again in April 2007.

Thanks to the high level of participation from all our users, we now have a wealth of data available to evaluate our services. 400 personalized comments were received (up from 247 in 2003). Each of these helped confirm and clarify information not necessarily conveyed by the prepared survey questions.

Library staff set to work right away, discussing possible changes to library policies and activities. The suggestions in the left column are among those that we are working to implement.

In some cases, changes were made immediately. Beginning with the Fall 2007 semester the library is now open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, during the semester. Previously, extended hours did not start until mid-semester.

One obvious problem at the library was the poor condition of the roof. We are happy to report that new roof construction began in July 2007, and is progressing on schedule.

Much information has been collected, in terms of your perception of service quality at Drake. We are in the process of analyzing that data, as well as comparing it to our previous survey results. Please stay tuned for more changes at Drake, made in response to your ideas.

At Drake Library, user feedback is very important to us. Suggestions and comments are welcome any time, whether offered in person, via e-mail, using our comment cards (located near the Circulation Desk), or via the Web from our library homepage - http://www.brockport.edu/library/suggestion

The LibQUAL+® survey is one of the ways libraries nationwide measure service quality. Drake Library conducted LibQUAL+® in 2003, and again in April 2007.

Thanks to the high level of participation from all our users, we now have a wealth of data available to evaluate our services. 400 personalized comments were received (up from 247 in 2003). Each of these helped confirm and clarify information not necessarily conveyed by the prepared survey questions.

Library staff set to work right away, discussing possible changes to library policies and activities. The suggestions in the left column are among those that we are working to implement.

In some cases, changes were made immediately. Beginning with the Fall 2007 semester the library is now open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, during the semester. Previously, extended hours did not start until mid-semester.

One obvious problem at the library was the poor condition of the roof. We are happy to report that new roof construction began in July 2007, and is progressing on schedule.

Much information has been collected, in terms of your perception of service quality at Drake. We are in the process of analyzing that data, as well as comparing it to our previous survey results. Please stay tuned for more changes at Drake, made in response to your ideas.

At Drake Library, user feedback is very important to us. Suggestions and comments are welcome any time, whether offered in person, via e-mail, using our comment cards (located near the Circulation Desk), or via the Web from our library homepage - http://www.brockport.edu/library/suggestion

The LibQUAL+® survey is one of the ways libraries nationwide measure service quality. Drake Library conducted LibQUAL+® in 2003, and again in April 2007.

Thanks to the high level of participation from all our users, we now have a wealth of data available to evaluate our services. 400 personalized comments were received (up from 247 in 2003). Each of these helped confirm and clarify information not necessarily conveyed by the prepared survey questions.

Library staff set to work right away, discussing possible changes to library policies and activities. The suggestions in the left column are among those that we are working to implement.

In some cases, changes were made immediately. Beginning with the Fall 2007 semester the library is now open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, during the semester. Previously, extended hours did not start until mid-semester.

One obvious problem at the library was the poor condition of the roof. We are happy to report that new roof construction began in July 2007, and is progressing on schedule.

Much information has been collected, in terms of your perception of service quality at Drake. We are in the process of analyzing that data, as well as comparing it to our previous survey results. Please stay tuned for more changes at Drake, made in response to your ideas.

At Drake Library, user feedback is very important to us. Suggestions and comments are welcome any time, whether offered in person, via e-mail, using our comment cards (located near the Circulation Desk), or via the Web from our library homepage - http://www.brockport.edu/library/suggestion

The LibQUAL+® survey is one of the ways libraries nationwide measure service quality. Drake Library conducted LibQUAL+® in 2003, and again in April 2007.

Thanks to the high level of participation from all our users, we now have a wealth of data available to evaluate our services. 400 personalized comments were received (up from 247 in 2003). Each of these helped confirm and clarify information not necessarily conveyed by the prepared survey questions.

Library staff set to work right away, discussing possible changes to library policies and activities. The suggestions in the left column are among those that we are working to implement.

In some cases, changes were made immediately. Beginning with the Fall 2007 semester the library is now open until 2 a.m. Sunday through Thursday, during the semester. Previously, extended hours did not start until mid-semester.

One obvious problem at the library was the poor condition of the roof. We are happy to report that new roof construction began in July 2007, and is progressing on schedule.

Much information has been collected, in terms of your perception of service quality at Drake. We are in the process of analyzing that data, as well as comparing it to our previous survey results. Please stay tuned for more changes at Drake, made in response to your ideas.