Re: Change to Political Science Major

The Department of Political Science requests approval for a change in the requirements of the Political Science major. Currently, students are required to take both PLS 300 (Political Statistics) and PLS 302 (Approaches to Political Analysis). According to our last external review, we are among only five percent of similar colleges and universities to have such a rigorous requirement. We propose creating a new course, PLS 301, which combines 300 and 302. This entails reducing some of the material that is currently covered with two separate courses but this proposal does reflect the approach taken by most departments in the discipline. In addition, the change reflects the difficulty we are currently encountering due to reduction in faculty lines. We simply do not have enough staff to adequately cover the foundation courses as well as electives within the four subfields.

The core courses for the Political Science major will now be:

PLS 111 International Relations
PLS 112 Comparative Politics
PLS 113 American Politics
PLS 203 Political Thought
PLS 301 Political Research Methods

The total course credits required for the major will remain the same at 36. Attached is a copy of a sample syllabus for the proposed new course.

Greg,

Dena Levy has copied me on the request to collapse PLS 300 and 302 into a new course, PLS 301, and the justification for that request. I am in complete agreement with the department.

Mike
